The Supreme court in the 1960s

Let us look at the contemporary political and social calendar. The more one reflects on the performance of the supreme court, the more one is convinced that there is a strong co-relationship between the judicial review of the legislative and administrative action and political and contemporary events.

On political field, in October 1962 India faced Chinese aggression. The ascendancy of the congress party was no more and it was losing popularity fast in several northern states. The increasing corruption and arbitrariness in the administration was the order of the day. In September 1965 came the Pakistani aggression. In 1969 August, the ruling Congress Party itself suffered a convulsion and split.

On the judicial scene, one sees judges with massive intellects and dominating personalities - Gajendragadkar, Subha Rao, Hidayatullah , J.C Shah were men of extra ordinary talent and intelligence. The third important factor influencing the 60's is the landmark decisions in England and America. They have had a profound influence on our Indian decisions as we shall notice. Ridge v. Baldwin gave an exclusive dimension to natural justice. Anisminic and Padfield revolutionized the Certiorari jurisdiction. Conway v. Rimmer put an end to the oppressive doctrine of Crown privilege after almost 25 years. Prof. H.W.R Wade in his Hamlyn lectures (1980) characterized Ridge v. Baldwin as the starting point of what he picturesquely described as " the Renaissance of Administrative Law".

1. What happened in India in October 1962?
2. Who was the ruling party of India in 1969?
3. Who was Subha Rao?
4. What do you mean by " The Renaissance of the administrative law" .?
